Practical AI for local businesses

Start with one workflow. Make the back office easier to run.

First focus: HVAC shops

The work piles up between jobs

Owners lose hours every week to small, repeatable office tasks.

01 Estimate follow-ups

02 Customer updates

03 Scheduling

04 Invoices

05 Inbox triage

They know AI exists. They need someone to put it to work.

Start where the workflow is easy to see

HVAC shops

Busy field teams generate constant handoffs between customers, technicians and the office.

A first conversation can surface:

- Which task repeats most?
- Where do follow-ups stall?
- Which tool does the shop already use?

This is a starting market, not a claim of traction.

Fix one workflow, then prove it works

01 Review

Map the task and agree on one workflow.

02 Set up

Build it in tools the client controls.

03 Hand off

Deliver templates, an instruction sheet and a training call.

$750 setup

$350 / month optional support

A service gap Aryeh can sell into

Why now

AI tools are ready. Enterprise consultancies do not serve most local shops, whose owners lack time and a guide to deploy them.

Why Aryeh

Years selling to small businesses in mortgages and cybersecurity. Local relationships and an operator's focus on usable outcomes.

Prove demand before scaling

01 Open doors

Offer a free 15-minute workflow review.

02 Close pilots

First two customers: $500 pilot each.

03 Measure

Stop if 40 contacts produce no paid pilots.

The decision is whether someone will pay for one working fix.

Simple revenue, explicit assumptions

ONE STANDARD CLIENT

$750 setup

+ $350 optional support

= $1,100 first month

AT 10 NEW CLIENTS IN A MONTH

$11k

first-month cohort revenue

Support renewals build a recurring base. Scenario assumes every new client takes optional support. Excludes pilots, costs and churn.

Targets, not traction

Working plan: cumulative customer targets at each milestone.

Let's talk about building this together.

A partner conversation about the offer, delivery and the first 40 contacts.
